Dole Leads Senate Attack On Clinton's Foreign Policy

By Elaine Sciolino
New York Time Service

WASHINGTON - Bob Dole has taken up his role as Senate majority leader with a two-pronged attack on the Clinton administration's foreign policy, introducing leg-islation to lift the arms embargo in Bosnia and to give Cangress more control over the scope and financing of United Nations peacekeeping operations

The move represented the first foreign policy confrontation between the new Republican majority in Congress and the administration.

It also underscored the intention of the Republican-dominated Congress in general, and Mr. Dole in particular, to put the administration on the defensive and to try to wrest control of at least part of the foreign policy agenda from the Democrats,

United Nations peacekeepers, struggling to put into effect an ambitious ceasefire in Bosnia, on Thursday criticized as counterproductive any Senate move to remove the arms embargo on the Muslim-led government, Reuters reported.

[A UN spokesman in Sarajevo said that the Senate initiative flew in the face of efforts to implement the latest truce. UN officials said that removing the embargo would encourage the Bosnian Army to plunge back into a war it had already lost.

(But the Bosnian government, despite having signed the truce, called for the lift-ing of the the arms ban. "The Senate move is the right thing to do and long overdue," said Prime Minister Haris Silajdzic. Those opposing the move appease Serbian fascism.

[In Brussels, meanwhile, the EU trade commissioner, Sir Leon Brittan, called Thursday for a concerted European Union effort to prevent a lurch to isolationism in U.S. foreign policy. Referring to the impact of the new Republican-dominated Congress on the policy of the Clinton administration, Sir Leon said that "it would be a sad day for Europe and the United States" if U.S. foreign policy became more isolationist]

In another sign of things to come Mr. Dole also pledged Wednesday that the Senate would question the legality of giving economic aid to North Korea as part of a far-reaching nuclear agreement and exumine closely the cost of hel mine closely the cost of helping Haiti.

Under one bill by Mr. Dole, the United States would cease to honor the UN arms embargo on Bosnia either at the request of the Bosnian government or at the end of a four-month cease-fire on May 1.

His move could not have come as a total surprise to the administration, because it largely repeated the language of a similar Dole initiative that passed the Senate in August, but it complicates administration efforts to assure the allies that the United States will not unilaterally lift the embar-

Although the administration has stopped enforcing the embargo, it has opposed lifting it on its own, arguing that such a move would set a precedent for other countries to ignore UN resolutions and would widen the war.

In denouncing the proposal, the State Department spokesman. Mike McCurry. said: "If you take on the unilateral responsibility of lifting the arms embargo, the United States would also unilaterally take on the consequences of that action, and that would include, in our view as a moral responsibility, the arming, training, and

Yeltsin Is Yielding to Hard-Liners, U.S. Fears

By R. Jeffrey Smith
Washington Pool Service
WASHINGTON — President Boris N. Yeltsin's reliance on a small group of Moscow hard-liners for advice about the war in Chechnya has surprised the Clinton administration and provoked growing worries in Washington about the future direction of his military and security policies. U.S. officials say.

U.S. intelligence circles have received a series of reports from Moscow that in pursuing the increasingly violent war. Mr. Yeltsin has walled himself off from many longtime reformist allies and is listening primarily to the head of his security service, a little-known figure who has no broad political experience and no special knowledge of Chechnya.

The CIA has also concluded that Mr. Yeltsin is listening closely to a small circle of other conservative military and security officials whom one official described Wednesday as "throwbacks" to an earlier political era in Moscow. The consequences of this "step back in time" are not yet clear, the official said, "but it is not a good sign" for Washington's policy of support for political and eco-nomic reform in Moscow.

In a classified CIA report given to policymakers two weeks ago, the agency's office of Slavic and Eurasian Analysis concluded that "there is much to be concerned about in Moscow" and speculated that Mr. Yeltsin's handling of the Chechnya conflict could mark a turning point in his presidency, several adminis-tration officials said. The report was first quoted in Wednesday's editions of the Washington Times.

Deputy Secretary of Defense John M. Deutch underscored U.S. concerns by telling a National Defense University audience that the Chechnya conflict was "a very, very serious internal problem for Russia" that would have consequences for "our relationship in the near future." Mr. Deutch said Washington wanted "to see these hostilities end as quickly as

The comments reflected a increase in U.S. anxiety about the impact of the conflict after Russian forces attempting to seize Grozny, the capital of the breakaway Chechen region, suffered aquilitary setback on Monday. The administration so far has offered Russia its verbal support for the operation, but only on condition that it be ended quickly with a minimum of civilian casualties.

The political situation in Moscow is more volatile by far" than it was several weeks ago, one official said, adding that Mr. Yeltsin's continued tenure was being

Flights in Bosnia To Verify Truce

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (Reuters) — The United Nations commander in Bosnia said Thursday that the Bosnian government and its Serbian foes had agreed on reconnaissance flights to verify a precarious cease-fire.

Lieutenant General Michael Rose said both sides agreed that their offi-cers would travel in UN helicopters to verify a government army withdrawal from a Sarajevo demilitarized zone and the disengagement of forces elsewhere. But he warned that continued fighting in the northwestern Bihac enclave could sabotage the truce.

Panel Finds No Evidence That Iraq Used Toxic Arms

By David Brown

WASHINGTON - A panel appointed by the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine said there was no evidence that chemical or biological weapons were used in the Gulf War, and urged that rumors of such weapons be discredited.

The committee was briefed on operations in the war and reviewed classified military documents concerning chemical warfare, its members wrote in a report released Wednesday.

The group, made up mostly of physicians, epidemiologists and environmental health specialists, said it "could find absolutely no reliable intelligence, and no medical or biological justification" for any of the many claims that poison gas had been used against coalition forces during the

Perils on 2 Flanks Challenge EU Unity

By William Drozdiak Washington Post Service

PARIS - At a time when its expansion to 15 members poses a singular challenge in achieving common policies, the European Union is facing growing security threats on two separate flanks - east and south that threaten its cohesion and, in particular, the crucial relationship between France and Germany.

While Germany looks at the power vacuum in the East and the unrest inside Russia with growing alarm, France and other southern nations such as Spain and directly affected by the spillover of Islamic radicalism in North Africa.

France's preoccupation with Algeria's civil war — which Prime Minister Edouard Balladur now calls his country's No. 1 foreign-policy priority - and Germany's preoccupation with the East have raised fears in both governments that the Union may become paralyzed just when it requires a clear sense of direction to press for closer political and economic unity by the end of

This strategic dissonance, which has

Italy believe their social stability is being sharpened in recent weeks with the evolving crises in Algeria and Chechnya, loomed as the most critical theme in the private encounter on Thursday at Mr. Balladur's ski chalet in Chamonix between the prime minister and Chancellor Helmut Kohl, according to French and German officials.

With Mont Blanc as backdrop, Prime Minister Edouard Balladur and Chancellor Helmut Kohl held private talks Thursday in France. The German also urged Russia's president, Boris Yeltsin, to stop the bloodshed in Chechnya.

Europe Uses Trade Lever As Rift With Russia Grows

Treaty Is Put on Hold; Kohl Calls for End to Chechnya Bloodshed

Compiled by Our Stuff From Dispatches BRUSSELS — The European Commis-sion, concerned over Moscow's use of military might to quash the rebellion in Chechnya, said Thursday that it was putting a trade accord with Russia on hold, and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany urged President Boris N. Yeltsin not to use excessive force again in the breakaway region.

The moves came a day after Mr. Yeltsin announced that he had suspended air raids against Grozny, the Chechen capital, but it was unclear whether they had actually stopped. (Page 8) The European Union and German actions reflected growing international dismay with Russia's handling of the crisis, even though the Western view remained that the Chechen situation was an internal Russian matter. Flexing one of its few muscles with the Kremlin, the 20-member European Commission, the EU's executive body, announced that it would not forward for formal signature an interim trade agreement with Moscow finally agreed to late last month. "We are not proposing formal signing of this very important interim agreement." the European Union's external affairs commissioner, Hans van den Broek, told a committee of the European Parliament. "It is a signal that cannot be misunderstood," he said, mentioning "serious con-cern slowly bordering on indignation" in EU capitals The accord seeks equal tax treatment for

EU imports and exports for a transitional period. To take force, it must be signed by Russia and the EU presidency, now held by France, on behalf of member states. The agreement was intended as a stopgap measure until a broader accord is ratified, but in common with all EU accords it contains a key passage on respect-ing human rights, which EU countries fear are now at great risk in Chechnya.

In Bonn, Mr. Kohl urged Mr. Yeltsin to stop the bloodshed. Mr. Kohl has been use his influence on Mr. Yeltsin, with whom he claims a close friendship.

But Mr. van den Broek said the clout of EU members in Moscow was limited. "We shouldn't think we can impose anything on Russia," he said. "It is a superpower." He sidestepped calls to end all EU aid to Russia

Mr. Kohl had refrained until this week from criticizing Mr. Yeltsin's decision to attack, and even Thursday he balanced his expression of deep concern by telling critics of German and European passivity that the Russian leader was still the best hope for democratic change in Moscow.

But Mr. van den Broek said, "The question 'Is Yeltsin democratic?' is popping up all over again."

Underscoring Washington's predicament in how to deal with Russia, both Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher and Defense Secretary William J. Perry criticized Russia's brutality in trying to crush the rebellion in Chechnya but maintained a spirited defense of President Yelt-

Until Thursday, both U.S. officials had tacitly supported a military action that has been opposed by a majority of Russians, including pro-democracy supporters, hu-man rights activists, the Parliament and even many in its military. Their view was that Mr. Yeltsin had every right to crush a rebellion inside his country's borders and that the priority for the United States was to bolster a fragile democracy that also happened to have an enormous nuclear arsenal

Porous Jails Set Off Crisis for the Tories

Escape by 3 Lifers Points Up A String of Security Failures

By John Darnton w York Times Service

LONDON - Three convicts who broke out of a maximum-security prison on the Isle of Wight on Tuesday evening were still at-large on Thursday, and, as more details about their escape came to light, the episode turned into a full-fledged crisis for the government.

The breakout followed a from inmate rioting to lax supervision and security, that have plagued the ancient and overburdened prison system. England and Wales have 130 prisons with a capacity of 53,536. As of Dec. 30, they held 48,274 prisoners.

The three men — two murderers and a poisoner whose diaries reveal a morbid obsession with exterminating the human - were all serving life terms. About 200 extra policemen were brought in to search the sparsely populated areas on the island and on England's southern coastline.

The prisoners slipped away from Parkhurst prison during an exercise class in the prison gym. They apparently used a replica of a skeleton key to open a back door, then ran 150 meters across a yard to a vocational training workshop and also opened a lock there.

Once inside, they assembled a seven-meter ladder from bits and pieces constructed during metalworking lessons, stole tools to cut through a perimeter fence, and then used the ladder to scale the outer wall.

They were missing for up to two and a quarter hours before a guard dog discovered a hole in the fence. That is more than enough time for them to have reached the mainland if they managed to secure a boat or slip aboard a terry.

The police, however, were working on the assumption that the men were still hiding out on the island which has a 400-hectare forest close to the prison, isolated farmhouses and a population of 130,000.

Thursday afternoon, the police found the home-made key apparently used by the convicts near a phone booth close to the prison. How they managed to get hold of the duplicate key was only one mystery surrounding the escape. British prison guards typically wear keys on charge from the Prison Officers Association, a union that has been fighting bitter battles with the prison system's management, that the warden had been told by guards two days before the breakout that they believed that prisoners had a copy of the key. The warden, John Marriott, was reported to have denied receiving any such warning.

The dispute took a new twist string of problems, ranging this afternoon when an assistant chief constable in Hamp-shire, John Wright, said he could not exclude the possibility that members of the prison staff had helped the escapees. His statement drew an angry denial from the union.

No one contended that security problems at Parkhurst were a secret. In October, the chief inspector of prisons, Judge Stephen Tumim, who was engaged in study of prison security, took the unusual step of writing to the director-general of the prison service about the situation at Parkhurst, pointing out that searches of prisoners were lax and that special electronic equipment to make them more effective was not being used.

Whether any steps were taken has not been publicly disclosed. But the timing of the breakout was unfortunate for the government and, in particular for the home secretary, Michael Howard, whose portfolic includes criminal justice. To bolster the sagging populariy of the ruling Conservatives, Mr. Howard promised a tough articrime program 15 months 20, including longer sentences and

Earlier this week, there were two nights of rioting at Everth-orpe prison on North Hymberside. On New Year's Day, a man awaiting trial on charges of multiple murder, Frederick West, hanged himself in his cell in Winson Green pason.

Last September, five prisoners who are members of the Irish Republican Army escaped briefly from Whitemoor jail in Cambridgeshire. Two weeks later, despite intensive searches there, a mass of Semtex explosives and detonators turned up inside the prison walls.

BLANTYRE, Malawi — Malawi's government will charge former President Hastings Kamuzu Banda and his closest associate, John Tembo, with the 1983 murders of four politicians, government ministers said Thursday.

The ministers said at a news conference that the pair would be charged within 48 hours and they would very likely appear in court in four to six weeks. "Banda is the principal defendant," said Information

Minister Brown Mpinganjira.

"There is evidence that the first order for the four to be killed was given by John Tembo." Mr. Banda, self-proclaimed president for life, ruled Malawi for three decades after independence from Britain in 1964 until he was removed in Malawi's first multiparty elections, last

The government decided that Mr. Banda, who is in his 90s and in ill health after brain surgery, was too frail to be moved to jail, Defense Minister Kassim Chilumphi said. Instead, the government placed Mr. Banda under house arrest at his Mudi House home in Blantyre, Malawi's commercial capital.

A government-appointed commission investigating Mr. Banda said Wednesday that policemen, acting on official or-ders, had killed three cabinet ministers — Aaron Gadama. Dick Matenje and Twaibu Sangala - and a member of Parliament, David Chiwanga, in May 1983 and then disguised their deaths as a automobile acci-

Heavy Static From the Capitol Basement

WASHINGTON - After years of shouting in the political wilderness, a cacophony of talk radio, conducted by some conservative hosts and some who are not — rose up from a dingy room in the Capitol basement in the heart of the place that many of them consider the epitome of waste, corruption and out-of-touch politicians: Washington.

Some came to have their egos stroked. Some came to gain a ratings edge. But others say they are in Washington simply because it's where the big story is.

"This is the center of the action," said Dave Ross, a Seattle-based talk show host.

John Carlson, who has a talk show on another Seattle radio station, agreed. "I haven't lelt this much excitement about genuine change since I arrived here just out of college in '81 in the heyday of the Reagan revolution," Mr. Carlson said. "I wanted to see it close up. I wanted to see the old guard packing their bags and the new guard taking office."

A Black Republican Breaks New Ground

WASHINGTON - When Republican presidential hopefuls compete in a Louisiana Republican straw poll this weekend in Baton Rouge, the contestants will include Alan L. Keyes, the first black Republican ever to set up a presidential exploratoly committee.

Mr. Keyes, 44, who twice sought unsuccessfully a U.S. Senate seat from Maryland, has opened headquarters for his presidential campaign in Atlanta in an effort to develop a Southern base.

Although Republican professionals question whether he can raise enough money to sustain his candidacy, backers are counting on grass-roots support for his brand of conservative populism, which includes opposition to the new world trade agreement and abortion. "We're already getting African-American converts from the Democratic Party," said the campaign's finance chairman, Art Rocker.

A Republican Targets Socks's Pen Pals

WASHINGTON - Even Socks, the presidential family's cat, is not safe from the budget-cutting fervor of the new Republican-controlled Congress.

On the opening day of the new 104th Congress, Representative Danny L. Burton, Republican of Indiana, took aim at the White House operation that answers the cat's fan mail.

"This is the same type of waste the American public wants to get rid of," Mr. Burton said. "I mean, spending their tax dollars on a fan club for the president's cat. The people have spoken, but the president doesn't seem to have listened." "Don't get me wrong," he added, "I love animals and have both a cal and a dog, but I cannot imagine the justification for spending tens of thousands of dollars to fund a returnmail operation for a cat."

The Gingrich Paradox

There is no way of telling yet whether Newt Gingrich's inaugural speech to the House of Representatives on Wednesday was a genuine expression of born-again statesmanship or a brilliant tactical exercise. One hopes the former is true, that his gracious speech was not merely a master-ly effort to make his "Contract With America" more palatable, but the emergence of a politician larger and more generous than his agenda. In any case, it was a surprising and startlingly effective performance — animated, anecdotal. humane. It also left little doubt that, at least for the moment, Newt Gingrich is America's pivotal political figure, Bill Clinton and Bob Dole included.

There is no telling how long the speaker's magnanimity will last; it certainly was not in evidence during the snarly press conference that preceded his swearing-in. But once he took the gavel, he could hardly have done a better job of portraying his avowedly parti-san "Contract With America" as an inclusive and nonthreatening document that even his opponents could embrace without fear. Nor could he have been more energetic in his efforts --- we are commoners together," he said of the House — to invite his critics' help.

The man who vowed to dismantle much of the welfare state paid effusive tribute to its chief architect, Franklin Roosevelt. The partisan who has spent every second of his waking life over the past 10 years seeking to create a Republican hegemony gave exclusive credit to the Democrats for bringing about desegregation. The man seen as insensitive to the underclass declared that even his cherished balanced budget does not have "the moral urgency of coming to grips with what's happening to the poorest Americans.' Mr. Gingrich had a wider audience in mind than the Democrats — a public that volcanically expressed its disgust with the way Washington, and in particular Congress, runs itself. His stated determination to make the House an open, responsive institution contrasted refreshingly with the business-as-usual approach of the old leadership. The new majority missed a coup in not swiftly adding the Democrats' belated gift ban to Mr. Gingrich's own proposals to clean up committee rules and open the House to more television coverage.

The emotional high point was Mr.
Gingrich's warning to his own party tha privatization and profits cannot over ride the need for caring social program The lingering question, of course, is he to square the inclusive rhetoric with is divisive budget strategies.

Applause for Mr. Gingrich's polical resolve should not drown out critism of his many misguided proposal. He backs tax cuts that he says wil help middle-class families and stimula- economic growth. But the proposed uts on capital gains, corporate inverment and retirement saving—are ill esigned to promote savings and investment and, as Representative Richard Genardt argues, tilt toward those with incomes over $200,000.

Since Social Security, Malicare and defense are exempt, the Hose Republi-cans' desired $200 billion a spending cuts would have to come frm programs on which Congress now pends about $450 billion. That meanscutting about 40 percent of every remaning program from border patrol to midical research.

This points up the ce tral injustice and hypocrisy - about the way Mr. Gingrich wants to go bout reform. He pledges to balance theoudget by aiming spending cuts at the most undefended citizens. Meanwhile, he well-off would get subsidies through the tax system for such benefits as unimited mortgage interest deductions or high-cost health insurance. So, in its surrent rendition, his fiscal austerity is inherently unfair.

He hinted that middle-class entitlements like Medicare and farm subsidies. as well as defense, would eventually bear some of the burden. That suggestion and his speech raise the hope that this unusual man's zeal for reform may. in time, be tempered by grander impulses toward mercy and equity.

-THE NEW YORK TIMES.

It Was a Good Speech

That was a magnanimous and --- who knows? - perhaps even useful speech Newt Gingrich gave before taking the oath as speaker on Wednesday. He seemed to be trying to crack the mold of what has been too long a stale and empty debate between the parties - stale on both sides, each determinedly ignoring its own weaknesses while creating a kind of cardboard cutout of the other's positions, the easier to knock them down. On behalf of his party, Mr. Gingrich made an important concession to the Democrats. then asked for one in return.

His was a tribute to their past accomplishments, "No Republican here should kid inemselves about il the greates leaders in fighting for an integrated America in the 20th century were in the Democratic Party. The fact is it was the liberal wing of the Democratic Party that ended segregation. The fact is that it was Franklin Delano Roosevelt who gave hope to a nation that was in despair and could have slid into dictatorship. And the fact is every Republican has much to learn from studying what the Democrats did right." What he asked the Democrats to acknowledge in return is that all too often present federal programs aren't working, and particularly aren't working well for precisely those groups whose interests the Democratic Party most seeks to protect. "I would say to my friends in the Democratic Party that there's much to what Ronald Reagan was trying to get done; there is much to what is being done today by" Republican governors. "We must re-place the welfare state... The balanced budget is the right thing to do. But it doesn't, in my mind, have the moral urgency of coming to grips with what's happening to the poorest Americans." He spoke of the problem of violence among inner-city children — "an 11-year-old buried with his Teddy bear because he killed a 14-year-old and then another 14year-old killed him ... How can we not decide that this is a moral crisis equal to

He "would say to those Republicans who believe in total privatization" that were living in a dream world. "And I would say to my friends on the left who believe that there's never been a government program that wasn't worth keeping. you can't look at some of the results we now have and not want" to tear the present programs apart.

segregation, equal to slavery?"

He is right about that. He suggests that there is a middle ground and that the Republicans (who otherwise describe themselves as bent on a revolution) have found it. That is part of what the coming months of debate will be about. But that is for then. The speaker has a more interesting sense of where the country ought to go and how it ought to function than his critics allow. It was a good speech.

Disaster for Yeltsin and Russia

Russia's intervention in Chechnya has become the disaster that Boris Yeltsin assured the world would not happen. Already the international community is gearing up for the first humanitarian crisis of the year as the refugee flood swells to 100,000 people. It is obvious the situation is going to get far worse.

-- The Jerusalem Post.

The assault on Grozny is a tragedy for Russia as well as for the people of Chechnya, and a display of tactical folly. This is not a war between armies but an act of armed suppression that violates the human rights of the civilian victims.

- The Guardian (London). President Yeltsin must regret his decision to declare war on Chechnya. The resistance his troops have met there proves that his goal could never be achieved by a mere show of strength.

His decision to proceed with brute force has jeopardized what was already a precarious administration and also the future of a federal Russia. And if the war continues for another month, it will do untold damage to Russia's macroeconomic policy. - Clarin (Buenos Aires).

A Plea for Civility in the House

Ten years ago, Ronald Reagan was president, the speaker of the House was Tip O'Neill and Newt Gingrich was a back-bench minority congressman who vowed to use "guerrilla warfare" to break the Democrats' hold on the House.

Now Mr. Reagan has Alzheimer's disease, Mr. O'Neill is dead and Mr. Gingrich is the man of the House, the first Republican speaker since 1955. Mr. Gingrich may find that what worked for him as a guerrilla fighter will be seen as bullying when he is speaker. Will Democrats now switch to guerrilla tactics, with truth squads and theme teams and packs of hungry Gingrich Jrs.? We urge both sides to keep the debate civil.

National Crisis: Russia's Fate in the Balance in Chechnya

PAIS - The dirty little war in Chech-Prahas already brought dramatic chare to the standing of Boris Yeltsin and to last can be expected of Russia's relation with the West. It is no longer possible to J.S. and European governments to pre-tal that what they call this "internal matis none of their business and that tut-tting about civilian casualties gives them rable distance from the consequences.

The shameful indulgence they have shown so far toward Russia's violation of treaty commitments on human rights was due to fear that the alternative to Mr. Yeltsin would be much worse. But his Kremlin clique resents even the mild criticism voiced by Western officials, and his opponents talk darkly of the renewal of a police state and the wreck of the reform program.

There have been several revelations. Much is due to the unprecedented news coverage of the battle. In part it is made possible by quite recent satellite communication by cellular telephone and telex. In part it is the combination of determinedly independent Russian journalists no longer willing to cower, and the weakness of a floundering central government.

The lies Moscow has used to cover both its aggressive action and its failings have been of such Stalinian dimensions that they are easily seen as ludicrous, showing panic, not masterly control.

It denies that this is a war, admitting only a "police action" to "disarm the armed bandits" and "help the Chechen people." It claims that the army is being withdrawn and replaced by Interior Ministry troops, that the Chechens are bombing and shelling themselves, that Grozny has failen but the assault must be redoubled. Correspondents who recently returned to Moscow say they did not bother to listen to communiques and official claims. They just drove to see what happened, at great risk but with little interference. This is very new in Russia, and it makes a big difference. The Chechens, although disorganized, understand that and tell them "you are one of our best weapons."

Sebastian Smith of Agence France-Presse said that made him uneasy, but he like the others was under the bombing and shelling and was not about to deny that it was happening. For the first time, Russians watched on television how their men were fighting and dying.

Moskovski Komsomolets, which has no love for Defense Minister Pavel Grachev

because of the murder of its correspondent who was investigating Defense Ministry corruption, published a picture of the minister at the battlefront. He stands smiling broadly in a field littered with corpses of Russian soldiers. It won't be easy to muzzle this freedom of information — only with a new terror that would provoke people who already know too well where it can lead. Another revelation is the disarray. disorder and demoralization of the once formi-dable Russian army. AFP's Mr. Smith said the only Russians he saw were dead, all in their teens. New Russian prisoners say in interviews that they are youngsters who were told they weren't being sent to fight, only to be stationed in Chechnya, and they didn't know what it was all about.

Stephen Edanger of The New York Times said this use of ill-trained recruits, with better forces to the rear, indicated that the Dec. 11 attack was mounted hastily after the failure of the not-so-covert rebel" operation in November, without adequate intelligence or preparation.

It is a terrible humiliation for the Russian military establishment. Their quarrels and disagreement are evident. So long as he is left in charge, General Grachev's response is to become ever more fierce, but he can't even rely on the army, having disgusted his initial supporters. He can only look to his Kremlin court.

Mikind

As the war continues, it sinks the Russian budget and endangers the IMF stabilization loans whose conditions Moscow won't be able to meet. Some critics believe that this is deliberate, in order to triple the already hefty military budget (22 percent of the total) and kill economic reforms. There is talk of renationalizing some industries.

The odds have shifted against the kind of reasonably stable, friendly Russia the West so hoped to see. But the crisis — and it should be seen as a national, not just a Caucasian, crisis -- also shows that enough has happened in five years for a new base to emerge that could redress those odds.

Mr. Yeltsin seems to be at about the point where Mikhail Gorbachev was at the time of the August 1991 coup, losing his grip, on the brink. There isn't likely to be any middle way left for him, either, now. If he doesn't pull back sharply and rededi-cate himself to reform and democracy, he will be swept over.

The West must recover its sense of basic goals, addressing not the fate of the leader but the fate of the country, which indeed concerns it. The kind of Russia the world will have to live with is in the balance.

O Flora Lewis.

Russia's Democratic Hopes Hijacked on the Road to Chechnya

By Yelena Bonner

FERUSALEM — All the democratic ideals President Boris Yeltsin has proclaimed in the past have been betrayed by his military assault on Chechnya. With this act, Mr. Yeltsin has crossed a Rubicon that will turn Russia back into a police state.

By attempting to crush the as-pirations of the Chechen people lose Chechnya's rich resources. There is also a political element using army and Interior Ministry troops, Mr. Yeltsin has revealed that brute force is his preferred method for dealing with anyone who disagrees with central control from the Kremlin. assault and the widespread violations of human rights.

Defending a state's integrity against the demands of individuals and cultures, whether in Chechnya, Karabakh or Kurdistan, inevitably will lead to the use of force and the violation of human rights. It will lead to upheaval.

What is necessary to attain peace and stability in today's world is an attitude of cooperation -- within state borders or between recognized states and those seeking autonomy or secession. This approach will accommodate the demand of self-determination through new forms of confederation or commonwealth. Working out the mechanisms of such relationships is the most acute problem not only in Russia but in much of the world today.

If this subject is not taken up with the greatest urgency by the United Nations as well as the Organization on Security and Cooperation in Europe, these bodies will become mere shadow versions of the failed League of Nations, and the world will become one huge battlefield.

Rather than express alarm at human rights violations after the fact, these organizations need to act ahead of time to work out political arrangements to avoid such tragedies as Chechnya.

As we have seen in Bosnia, once the bloodshed has begun it is almost impossible to establish normal relations that would lead to enduring stability. Instead, endless cycles of hatred and violence take hold.

In Chechnya, Mr. Yeltsin could have taken a democratic course the way he did last spring when he signed a special political accord with the president of Tatarstan to accommodate Tatar demands.

Apparently calculating that the Chechens were so weak that they could be suppressed by brule force, Mr. Yeltsin and those around him chose the military option. They launched a campaign of lies that painted Chechnya as a land of bandits, and they refused to conduct-serious negotiations with Chechen leaders.

The most important thing that can be done now within Russia is to mobilize public pressure through a broad anti-war movement. An important element in this mobilization is aiready un der way. Some Russian legislators have courageously gone to Grozny despite the heavy fighting to witness the horrible truth of what is happening so that they can puncture the lies of official propaganda. We must also admire the bravery of the Russian military commanders who have refused to follow orders to use force against Chechen civilians.

A key task of the anti-war movement will be to remind Russian troops of the rulings of war crimes tribunals after World War Il that soldiers are not obliged to carry out criminal orders to assault civilian populations.

From the outside, the stable Western democracies must employ all diplomatic means to pressure Mr. Yeltsin to call off his assault and negotiate with the Chechen leaders

Figures of international civil society, such as Jimmy Carter, the former U.S. president, should fly to Moscow and seek observer status in Chechnya. I am convinced that this is the only way to stop the violence from spreading.

What is at stake are not just the lives of innocent civilians in Chechnya, the local partisans and the Russian troops. What is at stake is the democratic path Russia has embarked upon since the collapse of totalitarianism.

Where Is the Moral Leader of the West?

PARIS - What happens when the president of the United States abdicates his role as the single most important voice of moral authority in the Western World? That is what has happened as Russian forces, under order from President Boris Yeltsin, have proceeded to bomb and shell the Chechens, in an apparent attempt to either force their submission or simply eliminate them.

President Bill Clinton has called the episode an "internal" Russian matter, and has expressed hope that the Russians will carry out their repression as quickly as possible. Meanwhile, the spokesman of the U.S. State Department has compared the attack on Chechnya with the American Civil War, making the point that even in America a secession was prevented by force.

Is Mr. Clinton suggesting that the Russians should apply even greater force, so as to eliminate the Chechens more quickly than they already appear to be doing? If so, what will be left in Chechnya?

is the State Department suggesting that the brutal 300-year Russian effort to conquer or eliminate the Chechens is somehow the same as the cause of maintaining the American Union amid political differences over the issue of slavery? That Boris Yeltsin is a sort of Abraham Lincoln? That 1860 is the same as 1995?

All of this flies in the face of history, logic and the most elementary moral principles.

The fact is that the White House, and the president who resides there, have in our time acquired a central responsibility as the West's voice of moral authority, and President Clinton has abBy John J. Maresca

President Yeltsin, are guilty of brutal repression of the Chechens, against all standards of human rights and numerous specific commitments under the United Nations Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. the Helsinki accord, the Charter of Paris and many other agreements by which Russia is internationally bound.

Yet the American president will not say so. The Russians' actions in Grozny are deeply morally offensive even without their specific international undertakings, but Mr. Clinton stays silent and goes duck hunting.

There is something eerie about the fact that the international community has become involved in Bosnia (without the United States, it is true) but has not touched the Chechen problem. despite the similarities between the two conflicts. The problem of Chechnya is no more "internal than that of Bosnia, but the abdication of U.S. moral leadership has come into clearer focus.

Does the White House believe that its silence on this issue will reinforce Mr. Yeltsin's increasingly hollow regime, in which power sporadically shifts from one obscure individual to another, which has the support of only 15 percent of the people, and which is slipping rapidly back toward the authoritarian methods power has at last shifted back where the Founders intended: to Congress, the branch closest to the people.

Reality: One year from now, Speaker Newt Gingrich will be running for president on the theory that only from the White House can the nascent "Opportunity Society" be brought to term. Never mind the exciting year of the new majority's kept promises and the minority's mountng resistance; the main event will not be the congressional elections but the presidential election.

2. The Generational Ripoff. Hubris: A resurgence of self-reli-ance, family responsibility and spiritual affirmation will break the shackles of welfarism that burden the taxpayer and demean the recipients. Reality: Deficits are being caused less by helping the poor than by the aged and elderly of all incomes rip-

The Great Elected-Electorate

Hubris: the changing of the Old Democratic guard in the House ends arrogant, corrupt one-party rule and brings the new openness needed to restore the respect the voters once had for their representatives. Reality: Here, a little hubris is warranted. A representative's staff remains bloated, but committee staffs are cut, and term limits on chairmanships work against entrenchment. While old politicians took pot shots at the new rules adopted Wednesday, huffing about gifts from lobbyists, the Newt Dealers were stripping lobbyists of their most valuable asset: exclusive access to information. Opening committee meetings and putting all documents electronically on-line is breathtaking.

5. Partisan Struggle. Hubris: Congress proposes, the president meekly opposes, Congress disposes — boyoboy, is slashing and burning going to be a hoot. Reality: When the economy begins to slow for whatever reason, the Republican candidates outside Washington — Pete Wilson in Cali-fornia and Lamar Alexander in Tennessee — will blame insiders Gingrich and Senators Bob Dole and Phil Gramm for botching the '94 mandate.

 $\textit{Time for Graying America} \ \ \textit{p} \ \textit{Redo Its Retirement Sums}$

WASHINGTON — Happy New Year — you're a year older. If it's any consolution, you're not alone. Collectively, we are the oldest humans who have ever lived, and we are rapidly getting older.

After thousands of years in which the age structure stayed constant - held in check by infectious disease and what now seem astronomical child and maternal death rates - the 20th century has seen a rapid shift. Less than I percent of the world's population was aged 65 or older in 1900. Today the figure is 6 percent, heading toward 20 percent by 2050. Among all the changes of a consequential century, this may prove to be one of the greatest. The United States is way ahead of the global curve. Those over 65 are already 12 percent of the population and may be 25 percent by midcentury. Unless Social Security and Medicare, the principal age-triggered entitlement programs, change commensurately, and very soon, America will march into a devastating financial trap.

The crunch will come about 2010 when the baby boomers begin to retire. In just one decade, while the population grows by 2 percent, the number of retirees will swell by 30 percent. Instead of five Americans working to support one retiree, there will be only three.

There are only three possible consequences:

By Jessica Mathews

deficits (federal and state) will balloon out of control no matter how much other programs are cut; those who are working will have to pay much higher taxes: or retirees will receive considerably lower benefits.

The fair and stunningly simple alternative is to raise the retirement age. After all, when Social Security was enacted, life expectancy was only 62—three years less than retirement with full benefits. Today life expectancy in America is 76 and still climbing. With the same relationship today, retirement would be set at almost 80!

In 1940 an American could expect to spend 7 percent of his or her adult life in retirement. Today that has almost quadrupled, to 26 percent, and a long retirement has become a general expectation, if not a right.

But how long? Steadily lengthening life expectancy could mean that in the not too distant future an average retiree might draw benefits for 30 years and spend more than one-third of his or her adult life in retirement. Social Security was never intended to bear such a burden.

The logical fix is to link retirement age to rowing life expectancy, either by periodically picking a rising age — 70 would be reasonable now — or by agreeing on a percentage, perhaps one-fifth of adult life, that would be spent in retirement.

one knows how far life expectancy will mb. Over time, differences of a few years uld multiply the numbers of Social Securind Medicare recipients several fold.

c other enigma is whether, as people live r. the aging process will start later and by the same (or fewer) years before or whether people who live longer will spend more years with the disabilities of ollage. In other words, as better health and relical care extend life, will the length of old ee stay the same, grow or shrink? You ould never know it from last year's America health care debate, but the answers we also largely determine whether health cae costs can ever be controlled. Today a Ayear-old uses 10 times the medical care of 40-year-old. In 20 years might the ratio belown to five times? And how many 75-, 81 and 95-year-olds will there be?

The real instery, however, is why so little attention is pid to the social cataclysm that is heading or way. Medicine, housing transportation and employment practices, among many olers, will have to make fundamental adjustments. Left untended, Social Security and Melicare will break the budget and quintuple today's deficit.

Yet most effort to reform Social Security fail, including, mor recently, the Bipartisan Commission on Endement and Tax Reform.

Among the proposal this commission could

Two scientific unknowns complicate deding on what the society can afford. First, 70. Although this would be only a small increase over the 67-year-old threshold that will go into effect in 2012, it would go a long way toward solving the looming fiscal shortfall. The difference would be raising the retirement age by five months a year beginning in 2000, instead of by two months a year.

Seldom are policymakers confronted with a problem as bad as this one that has a solution as simple and meritorious - and apparently unpopular. Though we Americans are living 14 years longer than we were when Social Security was launched, we have agreed to raise the full-benefits threshold by ly two years, and the trend is toward earlier, not later, retirement.

Perhaps people are unhappy in their last jobs, or are unable to renew careers because employers shun the health insurance costs of older employees. Or it may be that we have thoroughly adapted to what was once a luxury and will fight any attempt to cut it back.

Whatever the reasons, the only fair and politically feasible way to adjust Social Security and Medicare will be slowly and well in advance. That leaves very little time before the baby boom retirement wave hits us. Nineteen ninety-five would be the right time to begin to get serious about facing demographic facts.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Progressives' Goals

Regarding "Liberalism Heads for the Fringe" (Opinion, Dec. 31) by George F. Will:

Mr. Will's view of the Progressive movement is astonishing. He imagines Progressives, from the turn of the century onward, striving "to concen-trate political power in Washington, and Washington power in the presidency." Such a project never occurred to the majority of that vast and widespread movement.

On the contrary, its main goal was to restore to the people the political power that had gradually been usurped in the decades following the Industrial Revolution. Progressives of both parties were responsible for the adoption of initiative, referendum and recall in 12 states. They battled and crushed corrupt political machines in cities all over the nation. They achieved for the people the secret ballot, direct primaries. the right to elect their U.S. senators themselves, and for women the right to vote. What was the point of all this effort if, as Mr. Will says, they really wanted "to correct the incompetence of the people"? Other Progressive reforms, such as breaking up monopolies that were squeezing out small businesses and threatening free enterprise, protecting the rights of the working man. outlawing child labor and conserving national resources, did necessarily give some new powers to the federal government. No doubt Mr. Will noticed and deplores this fact. Perhaps he feels that the federal agencies which ensure these rights and enforce these laws are among finds so expendable. "Back to 1900," says Mr. Will, "is a serviceable summation of the conservatives' goal." Even Ronald Reagan probably only dreamed of pushing America back to August 1929, so the new conservatives have quite a program. Well, thanks, Mr. Will,

the "towering bureaucracies" he

MARCIE MEYER. Yens, Switzerland.

Mr. Will's generalizations seriously misrepresent American history. Early 20th century fascination with "scientific management" was not confined to liberal or progressive programs for government, but permeated all movements, including those of big business (Taylorism, for example). The Progressives saw rationalization as a weapon against the pervasive corruption and venality that enslaved local government to powerful moneyed interests at the turn of the century. Local institutions in America today do need more respect and broader participation, but they won't get it by going back to 1900.

A State Duty to Protect Regarding "He Has a Contract Out on America" (Opinion, Jan. 2) by Anthony Lewis:

Mr. Lewis, in a well-reasoned argument about the destructiveness of individualism, notes the tragedy of Georges Bank fishing and possible desertification of federal lands allo-cated for grazing. He also notes an item in Newt Gingrich's "Contract With America" that would "make it virtually impossible for any govern-ment body, state or federal, to protect the environment. A century ago, Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, a fervent Republican, had this to say about the proper role of government: "Somewhere betweet the extremes of unlimited individualism on the one hand and persolal monarchy or state socialism of the other can be found the mean, in which it is possible to use the united power of the community expressed in the state for the benefit a mankind and the protection of chilization." To those who say Mr. Gingrich is living in the past, I say think again. In the 19thcentury, only the callow were so shallow. My great-great-grandfather would not be pleased with the turn his party has taken.

Safire as Scrooge Regarding "The Marxist Notion of Class Shouldn't Rule in America" (Opinion, Dec. 23) by William Safire:

Leave Marx out of it. Mr. Safire's notion of class system in America could be from Eberlezer Scrooge. Why shouldn't parents deduct their children's higher education expenses? What better way for everyone to invest in America's future than to invest in the education of its sons and daughters. What about parents with two or three kids of college age — how does Mr. Safire expect the free market to "tamp down" their expenses? With regard to working while in school, most jobs in university towns are lowpaying. Usually a working student can make enough to cover only a portion of room and board, and not the high tuition that today's students must pay. If Mr. Safire is an example of the new Republicans' class ideals, then I'll take FDR or Bill Clinton any day.

A Nonuniversal Universe?

Regarding "Confusion Over Big Bang Theory" (Features, Nov. 3) by John Noble Wilford:

You have published some interesting articles about the discrepancy between old stars and a "young" universe. Is it conceivable that the Lord of Creation formed two or more conglomerations so far apart as to be virtually independent of each other? If a Big Bang took place in one part of the universe, could we now be witnessing an interaction? LOUIS KUSHNER.

MY GOLDEN TRADES

By Ivan Klima. Translation from Czech by Paul Wilson. 284 pages. $22. Scribner's.

Reviewed by Carolyn See

THIS beautiful collection of short stories marks the touchy transition of an artist "under communism," who has made an elegant career of teasing his government, to another phase: being an artist in a great big world, where, even after the Velvet Revolution, life is still a drag. Because it's not just totalitarianism that has bored into the human spirit, it's other humans, and the general human tendency toward screwing up. Ivan Klima seems to be noticing that when one set of problems disappears, another set comes into view, and the nature of these problems is that they are almost by defini-

The "golden trades" of the title refer to all the goofy jobs that Klima—forbidden to be a writer by the formerly repressive Czechoslovak government found himself involved in. In an afterword, he notes that he did work at most of these jobs: He spent time as a courier and as a surveyor's assistant, he was part of a circle of book smug-glers, he drove a train and poked about in archaeological digs. (All the people who were suited to drive trains and work in archaeology were probably forced to work at the local newspaper or in a bookstore.)

These stories are about wasted time, nothing getting done, con-nections not made, opportunities missed. When the system is set up like that, your only defense is to know it, to be intelligent, but that's your torture too, since presumably the ignorant don't know the difference.

The narrator here hangs out. His life is colored by apprehen-sion and "anxiety." He worries that the cops are following him, and sometimes they are. He stands hopelessly by as people

In "The Surveyor's Assistant," Klima makes his transitional jump from life "under communism" to life as most of us know it — just "under." Once again he's assigned a totally meaningless job. He must show up at this job or lose his state pension and rot in his old age. So returned to the ace. South took he shows up, in a little village in his club raff and should have the middle of Czech nowhere, led a trump. veyor, of course. He's just a kid, a dyed-in-the-wool product of socialism, and he's the only one in this collection of stories who really likes his job. His task is to measure all that he sees and all that he can't see. Someone buried a lot of stone markers around here a long time ago, and the surveyor's task is to find those markers, dig them are run over by trains and then up, be sure they're in the right can't be identified, or as those place and then bury them again. The narrator tags along for the keys down to the station and ride, for the pension, and because he finds, surprisingly, that since he's not allowed to write, the next best thing is to be outdoors, digging, getting close to Czech earth. Because surely no one can corrupt that.

Except that the earth is hidnear him, presumably) couriers cously scorched by chemicals, are as archaic and unneeded as and weird farming practices saddles on a freeway. Indeed, all have blown away the topsoil in previously verdant fields.

> The young surveyor doesn't get it. He's dedicated to his vision and blind to life. He keeps on measuring, imposing meaningless order on irreparable chaos. And he ensures destruction wherever he goes.

The difference between the surveyor and his alienated, lonely, intelligent assistant goes far beyond totalitarianism, and even beyond big government and the lone individual. There are always people out there who throw out the good stuff while keeping the bad. The artist, who has the sense to notice, gets stuck with writing it down.

Death and the Maiden Directed by Roman Polanski. France, Britain.

Roman Polanski knows that a stylish thriller is often the best route to weightier matters. Without its glossy commercial surface, "Rosemary's Baby" would never have made Devil worship so viscerally chilling. His new film, "Death and the Maiden," is a similar triumph for Polanski. His brilliance with the camera turns Ariel Dorfman's well-meaning but pretentious play about human rights into a harrowing experience. The film is a threecharacter story set in an unspecified South American country (standing in for Dorfman's native Chile) after the fall of a dictator. Sigourney Weaver plays Paulina Escobar, a woman who was kidnapped and tortured during the dictatorship. Stu-art Wilson plays her husband, Gerardo, a lawyer who has just been named to head a human-rights commission, a panel that will investigate murder but not cases of unlikely survival like Paulina's. Ben Kingsley is Roberto Miranda, a doctor who gives Gerardo a lift home when his car breaks down, and who Paulina insists is her torturer. The look and atmosphere of the film are stunningly effective. Polanski has created a backdrop for a horror movie, which turns out to be just right for the horrors the film explores.

Quaint Kurashiki Is a Cache of Western Art

mind a very

By Carol Lutfy

URASHIKI, Japan - Visiting Kurashiki is a little like watching a samurai movie starring John Wayne: Visitors would be wise to suspend disbelief—and in some cases, to relax their standards—if they are to subsens the circle watches and in some cases, to relax their standards—if they are to embrace the city's unexpected channs.
At first glance Kurashiki calls to mind traditional Japan. Its historic district looks like a 17thcentury stage set, with feathery willow trees hug-ging a narrow canal and whitewashed, black-tiled buildings dotting cobblestone side streets, without an electrical wire in sight anywhere. But Kura-shiki, a city of 400,000 in Okayama Prefecture, roughly 350 miles (560 kilometers) west of Tokyo.

is about as far from the real Japan as a trip to Tokyo Disneyland. Though the old merchant quarter has been skillfully restored to recall the At first glance, town's beyday 300 years ago as a flourishing business center, to the city calls to day it is merely a shell for a distinctly different identity. Behind its traditional veneer, traditional Japan. Kurashiki is culturally one of the most Western-influenced provincial cities in Japan. As the site of the nation's first Western art museum, ment in England, founded in 1930, it is best known for its pioneering appreciation of European art.

The city is the birthplace of the brilliant textile industrialist Magosaburo Ohara, whose lifelong patronage made it one of the first museum capitals in the country. Facing the canal alone are five museums: the Ohara Museum of Art, the Ninagawa Museum of Antiquities, the Folkcraft Museum, the Japanese Rural Toy Museum and the Archaeology Museum. Kurashiki has 14 museums in total, many of them privately owned. All this art and culture can feel a bit dated, even incongruous, in a city as remote as Kurashiki. The museum offerings are noticeably uneven in quality and sometimes represent an awkward juxtaposi-tion of East and West, old and new.

Before Kurashiki became famous for its museums, it had a more strategic incarnation as a major collection and distribution center for rice in the Edo Period (1615-1868). The town fell under the supervision of the Tokugawa Shogunate, which meant that its merchants, free from the normally complex and costly distribution system, got rich.
They built handsome black-and-white checkerboard storehouses, and found that with a few minor adjustments the houses made impressive residences, too. The design of these warehouses, or kura, is distinctive to Kurashiki.

The physical and symbolic center of the city's historic district, the Ohara Museum embodies what is both endearing and irritating about Kur-ashiki. Based on a Greek temple, the architecture is too ostentatious and overpowering for the canal it sits on, and many of its paintings are of dubious quality. But the story behind the muse-um reveals an interesting context that more than compensates for its shortcomings.

The Ohara Museum houses an eclectic collection of paintings, crafts and antiquities amassed by Ohara and his son, Soichiro, from 1920 to 1968. It was, however, Torajiro Kojima, a modestly successful painter, who chose the artworks for them. Ohara gave the collection a permanent home in 1930, founding the Ohara Museum in Kojima's honor after the artist died unexpectedly at the age of 47. A Monet "Water Lilies"; Marquet's "Harbor of Marseilles"; El Greco's for The New York Times.

"Annunciation," and Matisse's "Cliffs Down-stream on the Etorta" were some of the master-pieces exhibited then that are still on display.

Between the main building and annex is a picturesque tea garden with a stream trickling through it. The annex contains works by modern Western masters, including Alexander Calder, Henry Moore and Isamu Noguchi, and an impressive range of contemporary Japanese artists.

Down the canal from the Ohara is the Nin-agawa Museum, founded by a wealthy Kyoto family in 1972, with its two stories of Greek and Roman marble busts and Middle Eastern and West Asian antiquities. Neither the quality nor quantity of the works warrants the $8 admission fee, but a visit is morthwhile for those who fee, but a visit is worthwhile for those who want a full picture of Kurashiki's cultural empire.

Around the corner from the Ninagawa is the Folkcraft Museum, perhaps one of the finest museums of its scale in Japan. Opened to the public in 1949, the museum explores Japan's Mingei, or Folkcraft, Movement, which celebrated the achievements of the "anonymous craftsman" and which many compare to the Arts and Crafts Movement who was friendly with many of its leaders. This local history sheds a personal light on the 4,000 objects displayed in two adjoining store-houses. In addition to pottery, straw jackets, brooms, textiles and glass vessels from Japan, there are brass objects, baskets and wooden chests from all over the world.

A few doors down from the Folkcraft Museum is the Japanese Rural Toy Museum, which is run by Hiroyuki Oga and his family as a business. Oga's father opened the museum in 1968 to display his collection of Japanese toys. He later branched out into foreign toys, which are on the second floor. From Japan are colorful plaster dolls, stylized wooden dolls, prince and princess dolls and dozens of bright-red legless dolls that are caricatures of the Indian monk who founded Zen.

The Archaeology Museum across the canal is housed in a group of remodeled granaries from the late Edo Period said to be among the oldest buildings in the town. The museum, opened in 1950, celebrates Kurashiki's first life as a cultural center 1,500 to 2,000 years ago when the Kibi Plain was a flourishing agricultural area. Elaborate tombs from that period contained fascinating relics from daily life; stone utensils, pottery and agricultural tools are among the 1,400 objects on display. Unfortunately, the museum's buildings are too dark and its rooms are too

One of the best things about Kurashiki is its architecture. The town's oft-praised storehouses, date from the mid-1600s, their sturdy simplicity said to capture the character of the frugal, solid merchants who built them. Facades are characterized by white walls with grilled doors and windows, and rows of black clay tiles set into a 30-centimeter-thick plaster-covered mud surface. From a structural and design standpoint, they have unarguably withstood the test of time.

Stylish Winter in Cannes

sun, sea and sand,

elegance reigns

on La Croisette

By Alan Riding New York Times Service

ANNES - The city fathers of Cannes have thoughtfully placed scores of little wooden chairs along the broad sidewalk that runs the length of the Boulevard de la Croisette, bordering the sea. So, on a mild winter afternoon, strollers can pause for a rest and enjoy the sight of boats in the bay. Four weekends ago they would even have seen sunbathers playing cards on the wide beach. But since this is Cannes, watching the show along La Croisette has long been thought more interesting. For the best view, most people turn their backs to the sun, sea and sand. After all, during the Cannes Film Festival every May.

there are starlets to be gawked at. In the summer, the young and beautiful show off their After summer s bodies. And in winter, elderly promenaders offer fashion, elegance and pampered little dogs.
Yes, looking elegant is still important in Cannes. And it is in winter that this is most noticeable.

After all, Cannes was born in the 19th century as an exclusive winter resort, drawing successive generations of royals and aristocrats from the log of Victorian England and the snow of czarist Russia. If its winter visitors are now more likely to come from Paris and Milan, they are still drawn by Cannes's unapologetic obsession with style.

A bartender at the Carlton Hotel, which dominates La Croisette like some vast whitewashed Disneyland palace, explained that it all has to do with le standing, the status, of Cannes. Saint-Tropez has been overrun with campsites, he sniffed. Antibes and Juan-les-Pins are too modern. Nice is too much like a big city. Monte Carlo draws the casino crowd, which, he suggested, has more money than class. But Cannes, he glowed with pride, has preserved its "standing." Well. certainly in the winter.

In July and August, when its permanent population of 70,000 is quadrupled by vacationers who crowd beaches and restaurants and drive humper-to-bumper along La Croisette, it is harder to distinguish it from other resorts of the Côte d'Azur. But at this time of the year, when some hotels and restaurants close and many apartment buildings are shuttered. Cannes looks its best.

The weather - the winter weather - was of course Cannes's original appeal. And while the cloudless days with temperatures in the 60s that I experienced in mid-December were something of an exception, local friends assured me that it never gets really cold. However, it was the sheer unspoiled charm of a Celtic settlement turned fishing village on the Golfe de la Napoule that prompted a former English lord chancellor to make his home here in 1834.

The story goes that Lord Brougham, who gave his name to the four-wheeled horse carriage, was forced to seek lodging in Cannes when an outbreak of plague disrupted his visit to Nice. He decided to stay, and in no time, other wealthy Englishmen turned it into their own playground. Until the 1920s, Cannes was only a winter resort. As recently as 20 years ago it was still fashionable for wealthy Britons, with maids and chauffeurs, to winter here. Today, Cannes keeps busy between Christmas and summer with book, music, advertising, movie and other festivals. La Croisette, with its twin rows of palms and pine trees and its beds of flowers, sets the tone. Along this boulevard the finest hotels are to be found. Between them and the old town stands the modern Palais des Festivals. Then, in the old town, wrapped around Le Vieux Port (chockablock with modern yachts), the mood changes. Near the waterfront, a flea market operates on weekends in a little park. Behind it, Rue Felix

Faure is lined with seafood restaurants that, even in winter, have outdoor tables. More of a discovery is Rue Meynadier, a pedestrians-only alley peppered with inviting food stores. I couldn't resist stopping, just to inhale at the Fromagerie Ceneri, Cannes's best-known cheese vendor. (How about some goat cheese called "Petit Billy"?)

The street leads to the town's covered market. Le Marché Forville, which every morning except Monday puts on a mouth-watering display of Provençal produce — flowers, vegetables, meats, pates of every kind, herbs and spices and, of course, olive oil. Opposite the market, it is also worth searching out a little delicacies shop called L'Auvergnat that displays 18 types of dried mushrooms and terrines of pheasant, rabbit, buck, wild boar, deer and quail.

ROM there, the old stone tower and 16th-century church atop Le Suquet are just five minute walk, up Rue Saint-Antoine past little restaurants balanced on the slope. Behind the church is the town's main museum, Le Musée de la Castre, which offers a mixed bag of archaeology, ethnology and 19th-century painting. More memorable, though, is the view from Le Suquet, west across the bay, east along La Croisette and down into the old town and the illuminated amusement park at the tip of the Old Port. Even in winter. the choice of restaurants is ample.

For lodging, we threw caution to the winds. Well, not quite. We stayed in the Carlton in a comfortable room with a little terrace overlooking the sea. But until the end of March, when prices double, the Carlton charges the equivalent of $210 for a double room, including full break-fast, as long as visitors stay two nights. The Martinez and Noga Hilton, also on La Croisette. offer similar deals at $160 a night. But it was only in the Cariton, with its turn-of-the-century ornateness, that we might bump into the ghost of a Prince of Wales or two.

As it happens, we slept soundly. The best we could come up with were a Ferrari and a Rolls-Royce by the hotel entrance when we woke up

Cruising Along Through the Channel Tunnel: Mind the Fish

By Kyle Jarrard International Herold Tribune

ARIS - You're sure it won't be an ordinary three-hour run through the Channel Tunnel to London when at 8:29 Robin Hicks, chief driver of Eurostar 9011, shuts the blind on the front window and vaunts.
"We could carry on all day like this!"

The British crew laughs, but a second later the blind's up again and we're back to the serious business of flying along at 300 kilometers per hour (186 miles per hour) through heavy fog 25 minutes north of Paris. You have no idea yet that there'll be fish to look for in the tunnel.

8:37: Quiet confidence reigns. Is there any fog so thick they'd have to stop? No. all say. Ever hit anything? A deer maybe. Breaks a headlight. How long would it take to stop the train in an emergency at

"Otherwise you would never be confident in yourself, never be good at the job." Hicks has been working on the railroads 15 years and made his first manel.

15 years — and made his first tunnel crossing last March. "It's just amazing to go through 50 kilometers of tunnel in 18 minutes and come out in England." The rest of the crew nods reverently. But then he adds: "After two or three times, it becomes an everyday occurrence."
8:53: How far under the seabed will we be? "Six inches!" someone shouts, "In some places, two inches!" Leicester corrects. "You'll see the water," Hicks re-lates, "and a few fish swimming around." 9:11: Three minutes ahead of schedule. 9:18: We've sailed through Lille at 190 kph and are heading to Frethun, near the French coast, with Howard now driving. Roberts prepares to head to the back of the train where there is an identical engine for reversing out of the tunnel in an emergency. "Are you the driver?" he recalls a passenger asking one time as he went through the train. "Yes, I am." "Well, then, who's driving the train?" "No one." So are drivers of such trains just high-tech monitors? "No, you're a cut above the rest," Roberts says. Hicks agrees:

Leicester puts it best, saying that with the demise of the steam engine and advent of the electric engine, "one of my good friends, departed friends now, said we became not the driver but the face at the window." He adds: "Now, with Eurostar, the face at the window is something very different. I'm sure if he were alive today he would have agreed that the face at the window had become somebody again."

9:33: "Here we go," Leicester says. You see two black holes ahead and then we're in the 51-kilometer tunnel. It's dark gray and the train's lights pick up a fog. The walls curve slowly, sinister and bowel-like; rails are flush with the floor. Signs give the grade of the slope, going down. Along a wall are pipes for hot and cold water to balance the temperature in the tunnel, which is 27 centigrade (80 Fahrenheit), because of friction of train and air.

9:40: Ten kilometers in. 155 kph (max is 160 kph). We pass the French "crossover." a pair of steel doors otherwise shut for aerodynamic reasons. Parisians Warm Up To Panini

By Pat McColl

ARIS - Ask anyone who sells them why panini are so hot and the answer bounces back: "It's the fashion."

Suddenly, just about every well-traveled street from Avenue Marceau to the Left Bank to the restaurant complex of the Carrousel du Louvre to the Marais has one of these outlets selling panini: Italian-inspired hot toasted sandwiches, most of a flour-dusted long roll of white bread.

Fillings range from an assortment of Italian cheeses and hams for evocatively named panini: Ponte Vecchio, Cortina or Napoli. Tomatoes, olives, basil, balsamic vinegar and Italian olive oil are the usual extra accents.

"In Italy, panini have been around forever," said a spokesman at the Italian Embassy. "It's only recently they have become such a fashion, mainly as a replacement for hamburgers and especially

Most of the Paris panini shops have a counter opening directly on the street. Wicker baskets piled high with the sandwiches backed with a grill where the panini are toasted on the spot cater to the take-

At the tiny Cafe Cappuccino on Rue du Colisee, while there are six high stools ringing the counter, it's mainly a takeout business with, on an average day between noon and 2 P. M. anywhere from 200 to 250 panini flying out of the shop. Prices range from the 20 franc ($3.70) Sicilia (tomatoes, mozzarella cheese, olive oil and basil) to the 30 franc Parma, which adds Parma ham and walnuts to the Sicilia mix.

Emphasizing the Italian ambience are colorful posters for Italian soups, pastas, aperitifs and Italian wines by the glass. Perhaps the biggest and most luxurious of this type of restaurant is Casa Bini's Lo Spuntino, which opened in May on Rue des Saints-Pères on the Left Bank.

Specialties here are panini that can go up to 48 francs for a smoked salmon variation plus two other kinds of hot sandwiches: foccace and donzelle. The breads and all other ingredients are imported from Italy twice a week.

"With this kind of restaurant, you don't have the problem of a chef," laughed Lydie Laurent, a partner in Casa Bini. "Fast food doesn't need a genius in the kitchen."

The decor here was inspired by Tuscan trattorias, from the red tiled floor to the green and white splatterware china to the olive trees outside the entrance. Takeout business accounts for less than 10 percent of Lo Spuntino's business, with the 60 seats turning over almost three times at every lunch. The restaurant, like its Right Bank counterpart on Rue de la Banque, still hasn't managed to attract the dinner crowd, although Swiss and Canadian customers have already asked if they can franchise the idea.

O'Café on Rue Marbeuf, which opened last April, and Panino on Avenue Marceau add to their panini options with an Paris extensive choice of salads. Bread for O'Cafe's panini is made by a suburban baker to an Italian recipe while Panino has its own recipe: a brioche dough made without sugar.

O'Cafe's salad bar offers 14 different salads each day, with coleslaw the current best seller. At Panino, the owner, Hugo Nataf, says his six salads are favorites with models from the nearby couture houses.

*Obviously, the customer can have a choice of any of our Italian dressings but the models all want them without" he On the other side of town at La Bonne

Pensée on Rue Rambuteau, when the owners added panini to a fast food menu they added the "try me" incentive of a free one after the first 10 bought.

And when Martine and Gerald Danel were looking for a way to distinguish their port-side restaurant in Honfleur from its Norman neighbors, the answer was obvious: panini, an instant hit with the summer crowd.

European Lifestyles in the Skies

By Roger Collis International Herald Tribiane

ONSUMER research has many functions, such as finding the need for more research, to prove pretty well anything you want, or simply to rediscover the obvious. What I look for these days is an entertaining read with a few predictable insights. Such is the OAG Business Lifestyle

Survey 1994, published by Reed Travel Group, which looks at attitudes and behavior among 1,270 frequent travelers residing in Britain, France and Germany. Respondents were mainly men (90 percent); 62 percent age 45 or over; 10 per-cent under 35, and 50 percent at director level or above. They made an average of 19 business trips in the last year (down from 25 in the 1993 survey). Predictably, European destinations are the most popular, followed by North America, visited by more than half the sample.

Travelers claim to work even harder on the road than in the office; more than 40 percent putting work and career before home and family; with only 8 percent saying they enjoy time off for leisure activities when they're on the road. Senior executives travel more and want more control over their travel plans often ignoring corporate travel policy for a more convenient flight (although 70 percent say their company has neither a travel line). More than half of all respondents always choose their own airline; just under half choose their own hotel. They also like to do their own research, local contacts being increasingly used to book air travel and hotels. Airlines are counting on recapturing

"high-yield" business passengers who have been downgrading to the back of the plane during the recession by offering bigger seats and more frills, both in the air and on the ground, rather than cheaper

But business travelers are sending mixed signals: When choosing an airline, factors such as a modern fleet of planes, comfort and legroom - especially on long-haul flights - frequent-flier programs and competitive fares have become more important than access to airport lounges, advance seat selection, priority check-in or being wined and dined in the air. On short-haul flights, convenient schedules and punctuality take precedence over comfort: 16 percent of short-haul travelers have moved down from business class to economy, compared with only 9 percent on long-haul flights.

Frequent-flier programs are the big turn-on — 86 percent of respondents be-long to at least one FFP (up 4 percent from the last survey) and 5 percent are members of eight or more programs. The average is three.

Three-quarters of respondents say they would choose an airline simply to earn miles, 16 percent acknowledging that mileage counting counts more to them than following corporate policy. Only 9 percent agree that frequent-flier benefits belong to the company. Although 97 percent say they intend to redeem their bonus miles, only half of them have done so, which suggests that they are saving them up for the big payoff — a potential night-mare on the balance sheets for airlines.

Favorite in-flight activities are watching the seat-back video, computer shopping and keeping in touch by phone and not in the least interested in computer games and video gambling. That is a fact that may have escaped Virgin Atlantic, which is fitting its 747s with roulette. poker and one-armed bandits.

Japan Airlines, on the other hand. seems to believe that the in-flight entertainment revolution has gone far enough by offering passengers special "silence" headphones, which are said to cancel out 70 percent of aircraft engine and ventila-

You are most likely to find top honchos relaxing in business class with or without the video; while Young Turks still clambering up the corporate pyramid are to be found working with reports or laptops in economy; especially women who are less distracted by first-run movies. But only a quarter of corporate travelers "always or usually" take a laptop with them on trips, and only 60 percent use them during the flight. The most intense in-flight workaholics tend to be young, male, very frequent fliers — and British.

Time out on trips is mainly spent watching television or reading in the hotel room (nearly half of all business travelers and three-quarters of women in the sample). Hardly anyone visits museums, although 27 percent say they will catch a film, concert or play. Only 16 percent acknowledge nightclubbing.

National characteristics reflect cultural

British travelers are the most independent and adamant about choosing the airline they fly, tend to change flight plans before departure, use the video during the flight, more likely to visit North America than other Europeans and are keenest to jog and hit the night spots when away.

HE French demand good food and drink during the flight and are less sniffy than others about also the most focused on work and career, according to the survey. French travelers look for airlines with extra legroom and in-flight phones, but are more likely than others to miss their flight. They are also most eager to earn bonus miles, but they have been cutting back more on the num ber of business trips.

German travelers are sticklers for airline punctuality and fearful about getting to the airport in time. They tend to use company travel departments to book flights and hotels and regard frequentflier miles as company rather than personal perks. During the flight they are the most eager to get out their computers and the least likely to watch the movie.

In an ideal world, the survey concludes, nearly three-quarters of all frequent travelers, whatever their nationality, would like to abandon their careers and stay at home with their families. Less than 20 percent would make work and career their

Cautioned by Pope, Jesuits Congregate To Review Mission

By Barry James

The Jesuits -- once known as the Pope's shock troops and then, more recently, as rebels opened their first general meeting in more than 11 years in Rome on Thursday, seeking to bring up to date the constitution handed to them by their founder-saint, Ignatius de Loyola in the 16th century.

Reflecting the Vatican's lingering distrust of the Jesuits, who are noted for their intellect as well as their often unorthodox approach, Pope John Paul II praised them for their social work but reminded them not to stray from traditional church teaching.

"The Jesuits must be strongly committed to social work and serving the most needy," the Pope said. "But this should never be separated from a global service to the church's mission to spread the Gospel."

The Company of Jesus has had only 33 previous such meetings, or congregations, in its 455-year history. About 200 representatives of the world's 23,000 Jesuits will meet in Rome until March 25, seeking to define the mission of the elite

An atmosphere of near-revolt of the early 1980s, when many Jesuits embraced leftist liberation theology and the Pope im-posed a "personal delegate" to restore order, has died down. Peter-Hans Kolvenbach, the Jesuit general who was elected in 1983, said recently that relations with the Vatican were harmonious, although they could

The Pope seemed to imply that the Jesuits had been brought into line when he said were now "without a doubt with the church, in the church and for the church."

mitment to the poor.

The growing presence in the developing world has confronted the Jesuits with many of the problems faced by their pioneers, such as Francis Xavier, who planted Christianity in Ja-pan; Robert de Nobili, who converted many of the Indian Brahmins by adopting the best of their philosophy, and Matteo Ricci, who preached among the Chinese Mandarins.

In seeking to carry their faith to countries remote from the Latin and Western traditions, the Jesuits are again seeking to develop a "frontier apostolate" and open up new lines of communication with non-Catholics, non-Christians and nonbeliev-

Resuming a historical voca-tion in Russia, which accepted the order when it was banned in the West, some Jesuits have gone to work in Siberia. Around the world, the Jesuits combine traditional roles such as teaching in schools and universities with a quest for social justice, such as working in refugee camps and soup kitchens.

Russian Jets Keep Grozny on Edge

By James Rupert

GROZNY, Russia — A day after President Boris N. Yeltsin ordered a halt to air raids on Grozny, the capital of rebel Chechnya, it was unclear whether they had stopped. Shelling of the city, which has demolished countless homes and other civilian targets, continued at a diminished pace.

Russian planes continued to circle Grozny and the Cherchen-held area south of here, and rebel fighters said they saw some drop bombs or fire rockets. But journalists who toured the city during the day were unable to confirm air strikes.

Russian gunners continued to shell Thursday, but less intensively than on many days since Russia's assault on the city began on New Year's Eve. Heavy fighting continued in the city center, where it appeared that a Russian unit had been pinned down for several days near the main train station.

Along a main street between the train station and Chechnya's presidential palace, more than 20 bodies of Russian soldiers lay amid their wrecked and burned armored vehicles. according to a Lithuanian cameraman working for AP television. The bodies and vehicles appeared to have been left from the first night of the Russian assault here.

Chechen fighters, who have fought off two drives by Russian armored vehicles into the center, said they were awaiting a renewed Russian assault after reports that Moscow was sending crack troops to replace the less experienced units that have conducted the assaults so far.

Throughout the day, Russian jets could be heard crisscrossing the region above heavy cloud cover. At a Chechen militia post in the southwest of the city, Salah Tsagayev, a 31-yearold oil worker-turned-rebel, said he saw a jet dive from the clouds and fire rockets over a neighborhood to the east. "There were three or four explosions," he said. "We couldn't see what they hit."

Mr. Yeltsin's order Wednesday to halt the bombing did not appear necessarily to include strikes on rural locales in Cheen-held territory to the south. Journalists have confirmed at least 12 air raids on roads, bridges, markets and a hospital since Monday that have killed at least 78 people. Still, no new air strikes were reported on rural targets Thursday.

The lull in bombing and shelling allowed some of the 100,000 people trapped in Grozny to scavenge for food in the streets. At the city's southern edge, which has remained relatively undamaged, people gathered at a row of tables set up along a curb to form a rudimentary marketplace. With stacks of crackers in red packages and a few oranges piled on the tables, the market seemed to offer Grozny's only bit of color - and its only reminder of normal life.

What worries officials in various European capitals is that the latest foreign and security challenges, which have underscored the distinct vulnerabilities faced by Union countries, are likely to become more troublesome in the months ahead, when most decisions and policies will be held in abeyance until France's new political leadership is determined.

The seizure last month of an Air France plane by four Algerian hijackers highlighted the fact that Europe, and especially France, can no longer pretend to remain immune from a civil war pitting Algeria's armybacked government against Is-

China Shuts Newspaper Move Highlights Foreign Firms' Problems

By Kevin Murphy

HONG KONG - China has halted the production in Beijing of the Hong Kong Standard, the only foreign English-language news-paper granted official permission to print in the country on a daily basis.

The decision comes as Beijing has moved to thwart other foreign media companies' expansion plans into China and as a series of contractual disputes involving foreign businesses and Chinese counterparties have jarred investor confidence in the giant but unruly

A front-page notice in the Hong Kong Standard on Thursday reported that the newspaper, owned by Sing Tao Holdings, would print its final China edition on Saturday. "despite the existence of a three-year contract."

"It was very short notice," said Jim Marret, general manager of the company, who was summoned to Beijing on Monday and told by

"China Daily is increasing in size from eight to twelve pages, but they knew that when the deal was signed," said Mr. Marett. whose newspaper is the second-largest selling of three English-language newspapers in Hong Kong. "If there is anything else to this. we are unaware of it."

A number of banks have taken steps to collect bad debts and enforce contracts signed by Chinese commercial groups in deals that have gone sour in recent months.

McDonald's Corp. is still locked in negotiations with authorities over the forced closure of the company's flagship restaurant in Beijing. The U.S. securities firm Lehman Brothers Inc. has led the way with a lawsuit filed in New York seeking nearly $100 million from two state-backed Chinese metals trading

The dispute is one of several that have prompted international credit-rating agencies to focus on corporate China's conduct.

"I guess they have a different concept of contracts," Mr. Marett said of the abrupt cancellation of the Hong Kong Standard agreement, which took a year to negotiate and which had been operating for four months.

"We are still talking, we are not at the lawyers stage yet," he said. "But we hope we can receive some compensation for an investment that was not profitable in the short

Authorities recently closed down Modern Mankind, a daily in the city of Guangzhou partially owned by CIM Co., which also controls the liberal Chinese-language daily Ming Pao in Hong Kong.

Hondo: A Bet for the Brave

By Allen R. Myerson

New York Times Service oil and gas business means the avoidance of risk -- balancing production with refining and marketing, forming elaborate partnerships, hedging in the futures markets - Robert O. Anderson's gamble is a rarity.

Mr. Anderson, 77, chairman and founder of Hondo Oil & Gas Co., sold off or closed the company's refineries and all its production sites to bet on one Colombian well.

He is not some wild-eyed novice. A former chief executive of Atlantic Richfield Co., he turned that company into one of the largest U.S. energy producers. In September, Hondo reported that its Colombian well had struck a great deal of natural gas. The company has cautiously cited published estimates that the field contains about 4 trillion cubic feet of gas, which would have a market value of about $2 billion. analysts said. Petroleum liquids from the same well could be worth almost as much as the gas itself, although the company would not project those results to the whole field. Hondo stock - which had become a favorite of shortnouncement, more than double its price just two months before. Since then, Hondo has drifted back down. The stock closed Thursday at $9.625, down $1.875 in American Stock Exchange trading. The initial exphoria over the Colombian discovery has cooled for some logical reasons.

The market value of Hondo's stock plus its debts currently comes to about $230 million.

The entire Colombian project, therefore, would have to be worth at least $2 billion to EW YORK — In an age when the have enough potential earnings power to justify Hondo's current stock price.

Estimating the size of the reserves will require a second deep well, which could take four or five months to drill.

Even then, Hondo would end up with only a slice of the profit. To finance the Colombian project, Hondo had to give Amoco Corp. a 60 percent interest, leaving 30 percent with Hon-do and 10 percent with another investor.

In addition, Ecopetrol, the Colombian stateowned oil company, can claim half of all earnings, and the Colombian government gets a 20 percent royalty on the remaining profit. Hondo's ultimate share would be just 12 percent. Worse still, Hondo so far has no market for its gas. The nearest likely customer is a government oil refinery 30 miles away. Colombia wants to promote the industrial use of natural gas, but has not yet agreed to any purchases. Completing a pipeline could easily take two For now, the Hondo well is closed.

Hondo remains heavily in debt to Lonrho PLC, the British conglomerate, from years of losses, with about $35 million personally guaranteed by Mr. Anderson.

Lonrho owns 39 percent of the company, Mr. Anderson 31 percent and his sons 8 percent; Lonrho could increase its stake to satisfy debts.

Hondo has prepared to get by with greatly reduced costs. The company now has only five employees, compared with 175 before its property sales in 1992. Mr. Anderson's two sons, who had been executive vice presidents, have both left the company.

ional Herald Tribune NEW YORK - Mexico's finance minister, Guillermo Ortiz, barnstormed through Wall Street on Thursday with a firm set of economic targets to prepare investors for a new issue of bonds rolling over the country's short-term debt. The Mexican stock market and peso strengthened in response. In late trading, Mexico's Bolsa index was up 0.78 percent, to 2,287.48 points, while in New York, the dollar slipped to 5.375 pesos from 5.575 pesos Wednesday.

A standing-room-only crowd of several hundred bankers and investors summoned to a New York hotel ballroom gave Mr. Ortiz a round of applause.

He also visited major newspapers, banks and credit-rating agencies with the message that the Mexican economy was not in a fundamental imbalance but suffering "a crisis of confidence" because it had delayed the devaluation of its currency for too long. point range, closed down 6.73 points at 3.850.92. Decliners were about even with advancers on the New York Stock Exchange. Trading was active, with about 309.15 million shares changing hands on the Big Board, off from 319.51 million shares on Wednesday. Philip Morris, steady most of the day, closed down 1 h at 571/2 as word of an unfavorable court ruling spread through the market. A federal judge rejected to-bacco companies' request for appeal of a ruling that liability lawsuits are not preempted by cigarette health-warning labels. Gymboree slumped 4 to 23, Tiffany slid 5% to 34%, and Tandy fell 1% to 49%.

The slump in such retailers was countered by strength in semiconductor shares.

The group got a boost after Dell Computer and Gateway 2000, two of the biggest makers of personal computers using Intel's Pentium microprocessor, said they were ready to ship new, error-free Pentium chips in their PCs. Intel shares rose 1/2 to 64%, while Dell climbed 1% to 43% and Gateway 2000 rose 7/16 to 221/k.

Adobe Systems rose 14 to 29% after it reported a 50 percent surge in fourth-quarter profit from operations.

Consumer-products makers fell for a second day amid worries that the Mexican peso's collapse would hurt profits. Kim-berly-Clark fell 11/8 to 49% and PepsiCo shed % to 34%.

Dealers said investors were also concerned that the employment report scheduled for release Friday would signal a robust economy and possibly prompt the Federal Reserve to raise rates again.

Spain's Problems Help Mark Gain on Dollar

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches NEW YORK - The dollar confirmed. fell Thursday as investors bailing out of Spain sold pesetas to buy the Deutsche mark. The dollar was also pressured as the market prepared for the release Friday of the U.S. employment report, dealers said.

"People are buying marks because they are worried the peseta will go down" and that buying hurt the dollar, said Tom Benfer, director of foreign exchange at Bank of Montreal in New York.

Traders buying marks for pesetas often execute the transaction by buying dollars for pesetas and then selling the dollars for marks.

The dollar fell to 1.5507 DM from 1.5593 DM on Wednesday and to 100.875 yen from 101.375 yen.

Rumors spread through the market that the Bank of Spain was selling dollars for marks and then selling the marks for pesetas to support the strug-

Against other currencies, the dollar fell to 5.3530 French francs from 5.3700, and to 1.3015 Swiss francs from 1.3102. The pound rose to $1.5631 from $1.5605.

In Europe, the Deutsche mark rose to 85.25 pesetas from 84.90 pesetas Wednesday.

The peseta is suffering from worries about inflation, traders said, even though the Spanish central bank raised a key interest rate Wednesday.

Derivatives Not Evil, Greenspan Says:

WASHINGTON — (Combined Dispatches). Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, said at a Senate hearing Thursday that special legislation to control the use of derivatives was unnecessary.

Alfonse M. D'Amato, Republican of New York and chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, called the hearing to look into the use of derivative investments by municipal and corporate investors in the wake of the $2 billion loss and bankruptcy filing by Orange County, California.

Derivatives, which are contracts whose values are based on underlying assets or indexes, are not inherently had or good, Mr. Greenspan said. "They are a bit like electricity: dangerous if mishandled but bearing the potential to do tremendous good," he (Bloomberg, Knight-Ridder)

Slowdown Hits Merrill Lynch Staff

NEW YORK (Bloomberg) - Merrill Lynch & Co. dismissed 180 people, or 4.5 percent of its worldwide capital markets staff.

amid a slowdown in underwriting and securities trading.

The cuts at the country's biggest securities house came at all levels, from managing directors on down, and involved staff in the bond and stock departments. Some of those who lost jobs had been with the company for almost 20 years, said a person familiar with the cuts.

Merrill is trimming jobs as the outlook dams for Wall Street profits. Earnings in the securities industry fell an estimated 80 percent last year, to $1.8 billion, amid rising interest rates. Higher rates deter companies from selling securities.

Merrill fired more than 100 employees last year in its fixedincome unit and also pared staff at the American Stock Exchange. Merrill had 43,650 employees worldwide at the end of October.

Carson Moves, Again, on Younkers

MILWAUKEE (Bloomberg) — Carson Pirie Scott & Co. said Thursday it had began a $17-a-share offer for all the common shares outstanding stock of Younkers Inc.

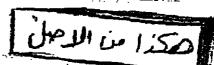

Carson Pirie Scott made the same offer in November; it was rejected by management at Younkers. Carson said at the time it would take the offer directly to the company's shareholders.

Carson also said it was nominating three directors to replace the Younkers directors up for re-election at the next annual meeting. on May 17. Carson said it was taking that step because the Younkers board had adopted a so-called poison pill defense that prevented Carson from buying Younkers' shares even if shareholders wanted to sell them. Soaring Newsprint Prices Will Raise Costs print prices are poised to soar worldwide this year amid growing demand, boosting earnings for forestry companies and pressing publishers to tighten spending and raise newsstand prices.

"Newspapers will definitely try to boost their prices," said Monika Heizmann, marketing director for Stora Feldmuhle, the newsprint unit of the Swedish paper giant Stora Kopparbergs AB. They have been living in a very comfortable world lately, so we will see just how they react to these new prices."

Newsprint costs have averaged around 15 percent to 25 percent of newspaper operat-

Swedish Paper Company Expands

STOCKHOLM - Svenska Cellulosa AB said Thursday it was buying control of the PWA-Papierwerke Waldhof-Aschaffenburg AG of Germany, a move that would create Europe's largest forest-products company. Svenska Cellulosa, Sweden's second-largest forestry concern, said it was buying 60 percent of PWA for 1.2 billion Deutsche marks ($770 million).

"We worked very hard during Christmas to complete negotiations ahead of the new year," said Ake Rietz, SCA's chief financial officer. "It's a big amount, but the timing is great. Paper prices are going up, so 1995 will be a good year, and 1996 will be even better.

From that perspective, this purchase will start to pay off immediately."

SCA shares climbed for the sixth consecutive session on the Stockholm exchange, rising 2 kronor to close at 128 ($17), a sevenmonth high. In Frankfurt, PWA shares soared 8.5 DM, to 243.5, and those of Viag AG, a subsidiary that sold the bulk of the shares to SCA, rose 3, to 482.

The U.S. ratings company Standard & Poor's Corp. was less impressed with the PWA acquisition, however, and said it may downgrade the Swedish company's debt. SCA's long-term debt is currently rated BBBplus, and its commercial paper is rated A2.

U.S. Sales Give Lift To Ahold

AMSTERDAM - Royal Ahold NV said Thursday that strong overseas operations helped its 1994 sales rise 7 percent from 1993, to 29 billion guilders ($20 billion).

The company, which operates more than 2,100 food and other retail stores in the Netherlands, the United States, Portugal and the Czech Republic, said its growth outside the Netherlands continued to outpace that of its domestic chains. U.S. sales rose 12 percent, to $7.4 billion, while sales in the Netherlands were up 4.3 percent. to 14 billion guilders. In February, Ahold bought Red Food Stores Inc., a U.S. supermarket chain, from Pro-modes SA of France Excluding that purchase, the company's U.S. sales would have risen 6 percent.

Ahold is one of the 10 largest U.S. supermarket owners. Along with Red Food Stores, it owns five other chains in the East: Bi-Lo, Giant Food Stores. Finast, Edwards and Tops Mar-

Cees van der Hoeven. Ahold's chief executive, said the company's strength outside the Netherlands "is giving Ahold an increasingly international profile. In line with our objective of being a profitable and fast-growing retailer, we continue to seek new opportunities." Shares in Ahold fell 70 cents to 51.80 guilders. The company will report complete fourth-quarter results on March 16.

STAR TV Gets Help in Battle For Asian Youth

TV's Asian music channel won the support of four international music companies Thursday it its effort to eclipse MTV Asia in the battle for the Asian youth market

News Corp., which controls STAR, announced the move to broaden the investor base of

The four companies that bought into Channel V are EMI Music Ltd., a unit of Thorn EMI PLC of Britain; Sony Pictures Entertainment (Japan) Inc.; BMG Ariola Musik GmbH, a unit of Bertelsmann AG of Germany, and the Warner Music group of compa-nies, owned by Time Warner Inc. of the United States. Each company will own 12.5 percent of the music channel.

Channel V, which is broadcast from Hong Kong, will be run in a 50-50 joint venture between STAR and the four companies after the sale, a STAR TV spokesman said.

Terms of the acquisition were not disclosed. News Corp., which paid $525 million for 63.5 percent of STAR in July 1993, will probably use the money from the sale to defray the costs of building STAR's

The joint venture will compete with MTV Asia, which is due to be relaunched soon. MTV Asia was on the STAR network until May 1994, when the two companies severed their two-and-a-half-year relationship. This followed a long-running dispute about how advertising revenue would be shared. Channel V was born out of that Hong Kong and Chinese pop service," he said. David Hughes, vice president of EMI Records, said: "Our relationship with MTV, which is a very good and very strong relationship, will be unchanged. This project is a good way for us to develop new markets and to help us promote our artists, especially our Asian artists. through this new medium."

Don Atyeo, general manager Channel V, said the union will redefine music television for all of Asia."

Channel V currently provides 24-hour music-video and other youth-entertainment programs to more than 50 million homes across Asia and the Middle East. It broadcasts in Mandarin Chinese, English and Hindi. STAR says there are plans for other Asian languages to be

EU Lets U.S. Talk Tough on China

BRUSSELS - European companies are increasingly alarmed about piracy of intellectual property in China, but European governments — content to let Washington take the lead in confronting Beijing - are avoiding U.S.-style retaliation.

"We have regular meetings with the Chinese, and we are raising this issue with them," said an official at the European Commission, the executive body of the European Union. Most of the contacts take place in Geneva, where China is trying to persuade its major trading partners to let it into the World Trade Organization, which governs global commerce. The EU official said it was too early to consider retaliation, though, and piracy was just "one of the issues" that China must address before the Union would consent to China's entry into the WTO.

The EU is just as concerned about getting China to lower some of its high tariff barriers on imports and grant foreign firms access to its potentially lucrative markets for cars and financial services, EU officials said. The United States last weekend computer software. Although American companies are most affected because they dominate those industries, European companies also are feeling the pinch and complain-

The London-based International Federation of the Phonographic Industry, as well as prominent European members such as Thorn EMI PLC and Polygram Holding Inc., have written the commission recently to urge it to take a strong line on piracy.

Although there are no EU estimates of losses to piracy, German industry federations have estimated their members alone are losing 220 million Deutsche marks ($140 million) of sales a year to pirated compact disks, $115 million on movie videos and as much as $1.5 billion on software.

Despite the losses, European companies are not clamoring for the commission to match Washington's tough tactics, just as they have supported the commission's conciliatory approach to trade disputes with Japan.

Liesel Quambusch of the Association of German Chambers of Industry and Commerce in Bonn said many Europeans feared that U.S. threats of retaliation were aimed at winning concessions only for American companies. She said the West should seek to get China into the WTO as quickly as possible to force Beijing to adhere to the organization's tough new rules protecting intellectual property.

Brittan Is Hopeful on WTO Entry Sir Leon Brittan, the EU trade commissioner, said it was "not impossible" for China to join the World Trade Organization "within a matter of months,"

Reuters reported. "I very much hope that it will still be possible for China to join," Sir Leon told a European Parliament committee. Sir Leon said he based his hopes on indications that China might be ready to comply with what its trading partners considered "minimal normal trade rules," something he said China had been unwilling to do.

• Japan's foreign exchange reserves grew $782 million in December, to $122.85 billion, a record high, mainly because of dollar purchases by the Bank of Japan to stem the yen's rise.

 Japan received a shipment of more than 1,200 tons of American apples from Washington state; a decades-old import ban on the fruit was lifted in August.

 Modi Telecommunications Ltd. said it was ready to launch India's first paging service, which is expected to become operational by mid-1995, in collaboration with Korea Telecom and Samsung Electronics of South Korea.

Agence France-Presse SEOUL — South Korean conglomerates unveiled plans Thursday to raise overseas investment in 1995 to as much as twice last year's level as part of a trend toward globalization.

Asarco Appoints 2 Directors to MIM Holdings

BRISBANE, Australia — Asarco Inc., the largest shareholder in MIM Holdings Ltd., said Thursday it would appoint two directors to the board of the Australian mining company.

The U.S. mining company's move was announced by MIM after the close of stock trading and a day after Norm Fussell, MIM's chief executive, said he would resign Friday.

Asarco said it would nominate Richard de J. Osborne, the executive chairman of Asarco, and Willard C. Butcher, a director, to the MIM board.

move could be interpreted as

Although Mr. Fussell indicated his departure was for health reasons, analysts said his resignation was linked to losses at MIM's main operating center, Mount Isa in Queensland, and to losses linked to assets acquired from Metallgesellschaft AG of Germany.

Mining issues pressured the the benchmark All Ordinaries Index, which fell 16.70 points, to 1,869.50.

Hong Kong Cites a Rise in Activity

HONG KONG - The chief executive of Hong Kong Securities Clearing Co. said Thursday that recent settlement transactions for Hong Kong stocks were about 50 percent higher than historical levels despite the recent drop-off in turnover on the cash market.

Anecdotal evidence suggests that most of the increase in settlements is related to stock borrowing and lending, a practice associated with derivatives trading strategies, Richard Heckinger, chief executive of the clearing company, said.

Mr. Heckinger said the jump in settlements is even more remarkable if viewed in relation to recent stock market turnover."

Daily turnover on the Hong Kong Stock Exchange has fallen sharply since reaching record levels last January.

Average daily turnover was 4.7 billion Hong Kong dollars ($607 million) in 1994. according to the stock exchange. But it slumped as the bear market for stocks dragged on, with trading values in recent months sometimes coming in under 2 billion dollars a day. Short-sedling was not enough to account for the increase in stock borrowing, Mr. Heck-inger indicated, because the stock exchange ad recorded few short-selling transactions.

He said "sophisticated" derivatives trading strategies were probably responsible for the increase in noncash market settlements. Meanwhile, turnover in Hang Seng Index futures and options has strengthened in recent months in tandem with the drop-off in trading on the cash market, the Hong Kong Futures Exchange said this week.

NHL Votes Saturday on New Offer

By Len Hochberg Vashington Post Service

WASHINGTON — The National Hockey League's Board of Governors has scheduled a meeting for Saturday morning after four days of negotiations ended with the Players' Association presenting its "best offer" of the 96-day-old lockout.

In a fax to each of the 26 clubs, the league said Wednesday it was calling the board together "to consider the NHLPA's final proposal." "I don't think that's correct."

Mack, who had spoken with the Balti-more Orioles between seasons, would have carned $3.25 million last year if the strike had not halted the season Aug. 12. He filed

In terms of average annual value, Mack's deal eclipses the previous Japanese records, the reported $3.7 million, oneyear contract the Florida Marlins' former player. Orestes Destrade, signed last month to return to Seibu, and the $3.5 million deal that Julio Franco signed with the Chiba Lotte Marines on Dec. 20. The Marines, who will be managed next season by Bobby Valentine, also signed outfielder Pete Incaviglia to a $2 million, one-year contract and pitcher Eric Hillman to a $725,000, one-year deal. Mack and Franco are the most prominent U.S. players to leave for Japan in their prime since Bob Horner played for the Yakult Swallows in 1987. He had received no offers in a collusion-tainted market after leaving the Atlanta Braves.

Japanese media have speculated that the country might see an influx of top American talent, especially if the 1995 season goes by the boards because of the major league baseball strike in the United States.

Waking Up in the Mart

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — Almost everything Americans buy is now made outside the United States. You knew that long ago. I knew it too, but I hadn't really believed it until various women took me shopping in December.

This meant killing time in women's wear divisions of assorted marts. What a learning experience these marts afforded. Nothing beats on-site inspection. As a result I now know that a mart is a store selling goods made almost exclusively in Asia and Central America.

During the hours women friends were shopping for perfection in female apparel I studied labels on women's clothing. Almost all of it, I was stupidly shocked to note, was made in China, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Korea, Singapore, the Philip-pines, Thailand, Sri Lanka, Indonesia, Bangladesh, Honduras, Brazil and Mexico.

One mart was selling wom-en's wear "Made in the United Arab Emirates." Something of a shock, that one. The idea of poor Arab women toiling for sweat-tent wages to produce clothes for American women clashed with my most ignorant and firmly held stereotypes of life in the Arab emirates.

Camel saddles, yes, yes. Had I wandered into that great mart's Gifts for the Guy Who's Got It All department and noticed a camel saddle for sale, I would probably have thought, "I'll bet that's made in the United Arab Emirates." But women's wear?

Even more astounding was a label saying "Made in the Northern Mariana Islands," because that's where the B-29s that carried the Hiroshima and Nagasaki bombs were based in 1945. I recoiled from the idea of filmy women's apparel being produced in such nasty atomic

This is unfair to the Mariana Islands, of course, which are populated by Chamorros, Carolinians and Micronesians who had nothing whatever to do with atomic bombings. In fact, since the Marianas comprise a commonwealth of the United States and its residents are American citizens, its produce was one of the few examples of mart-quality women's wear that could truthfully be labeled Made in U.S. A.

We are talking here of how easy it is to shock a smugly uninformed mind that has a high opinion of its quality. Doubtless you, reader, have always known that those sturdy he-man outdoors garments advertised in that swell catalogue of rugged stuff for rugged outdoors guys is all made in Asia.

What a blow to this romantic vision of American commerce when I wandered into mountains of this very stuff piled high in one of those all-under-oneroof-mall marts. Every bit had been made in Asia, probably by the same hard-worked nickel-anhour laborers who turned out the women's ready-to-wear.

Thanks to long exposure to journalism, mine is a mind that does not bruise easily, no matter how grave the insult. My friend Clark's is made of nobler stuff. He just telephoned angrily about a pot he bought at an outlet mart. Clark was not enticed by the Asian threads in which the mart specialized, but he couldn't resist the pot be-cause it bore the "Revere" label, suggesting an old Boston tradition of workmanship. Back home, inspecting it, he found

Made in Korea. "I feel insulted," he tells me, swearing to return to the mart and do something rude. Poor fellow. Soon we will all here be Made in Korea, Taiwan, China. Indonesia, Sri Lanka . . .

Forger's Confession, But How Authentic?

By Ralph Blumenthal

New York Times Service
TEW YORK — As a self-proclaimed forger of Old Master drawings and paintings, Eric Hebborn has had few modern equals. The 60-year-old English-born artist claims to have counterfeited "let us say 500" works that have infiltrated private collections, auction houses, galleries and museums the world over. He brazenly chronicled his career of hoaxes in an autobiography called Drawn to Trouble: Confessions of a Master Forger" (Random House) in 1993. But now some of his claims have in turn been debunked by an unlikely detractor: a former partner who con-tends that some of Hebborn's claimed fakery was itself faked.

In particular, said the partner, Graham Smith - who according to both men was Hebborn's lover in the 1950s and '60s - Hebborn did not, as boasted, produce a Brueghel etching now in New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art (and flush the original down the

The dispute, disclosed in Art and Auction magazine, has added a new dimension of duplicity and intrigue to a case that has already provoked its share of consternation and indignation in the international bazaars of art.

"Everything he did, he showed me," said Smith, 56, who contends he never saw or heard about several fabrications before Hebborn claimed them in his book. "He would have told me if he had," said Smith in a series of telephone interviews from San Diego. where he works as an artist and is writing his autobiography.

From Rome, where he has worked for years. Hebborn dismissed Smith's challenge as "bad memory." He maintained that he had not always let Smith watch him work and that Smith was not privy to all his secrets.

"I've got more documents than he does," Hebborn said in a telephone interview. In his book, however, he concedes he retained few records of bother to invent something?" his book makes plain that he delights in tweaking the art establishment and does not feel bound by conventional strictures. 'I need have no scruples in dealing with the unscrupulous," he wrote. The author of the Art and Auction article, Geraldine Norman, an art market correspondent for The Independent of London and a reporter who broke the stories of fakes by Hebborn and another notorious art forger. Tom Keating said in an interview that she found Smith's claims persuasive and that he had no reason to lie. Moreover, she said, when she once confronted Hebborn over his forgery claims, "he smiled across the table and said, 'I like to spread a little confusion.

For his part, Smith said that he had focused on Hebborn's book only re-cently, when he started to write his own, and that he was struck by the

The Eric Hebborn depicted in "Drawn to Trouble" was born into poverty in London and by the age of 15 was being described in a newspaper as "a keen and promising artist" who soon showed an affinity for copying Old Master drawings.

In 1954, while teaching at an art school outside London, the 20-yearold Hebborn met Smith, then 16, who was posing as an artist's model, and they began what was to be a 14-year relationship.

Three years later, by Hebborn's published account, he was working for London picture restorer under whose guidance, he wrote, "I began, little by little, to develop my abilities and improve my knowledge of the materials and methods of the Old Masters until I would one day be able to 'restore' a whole painting - from nothing at all."

When a dealer came in one day with an authentic 17th-century blank canvas, all that was lacking was a 17thcentury Dutch painting to make it worth a small fortune. Here, Hebborn says, he was glad to oblige, after which the picture was baked in an oven to

Smith said it was news to him. Considering their closeness at the time, he said, if it had happened, he would have known it.

It was about this time, in 1963, Hebborn relates, that their Pannini Galleries acquired "The Temple of Venus and Diana at Baiae," a pen-and-ink drawing attributed by London's Colnaghi gallery to Jan Brueghel the Elder. But Hebborn says that the way the lines seemed slowly drawn, as if by an engraver, made him doubt the pic-ture's authenticity. He resolved to make what he called "a copy of the copy" and "re-create the original."

After downing "a tot of brandy" for courage, he says, he copied the drawing and carefully switched it with the one in the frame.

In an act of bravado, he says, "I destroyed the old engraver's copy - I tore it to shreds and flushed it down the lavatory." Had he in fact been mistaken, he asked himself, and destroyed a genuine Brueghel in favor of a modern fake? "I hope not and I don't think so," he answered.

Smith scoffed at the published account. For one thing, he said: "I had a good eye and would have noticed the Smith also cast doubt on another caper claimed by Hebborn: that he eaper dainted by Revolut that he fabricated a drawing meant to be taken for a sketch by Camille Corot for a painting called "Portrait of Louis Robert" in the Louvre. No trace has been found of the purported drawing, according to Smith and Norman.

Hebborn's downfall, if his somewhat gleeful mea culpa could be called that, came with accumulating evidence of stylistic similarities in the execution of disparate masterpieces. But dealers he had snookered remained mum rather than press criminai charges, for fear, Hebborn writes. of rocking the boat and undermining faith in the market. He has also hit on the ultimate revenge. He says he is sometimes amused to take a genuine old drawing into an art salesroom and watch the dealer turn it away with disgust as soon as he recognizes the offerer.

And Hebborn said he was working on a new book, a how-to art manual. It will be called, he said, "The Forger's Handbook."

Hunters in the southern French town of Bessières turned out for a pigeon shoot Thursday, undaunted by threats from Brigitte Bardof to call in activists to confront them. Supporters of the former film star's animal rights movement did not show up in time, and the hunt leader, Huber Alazia, said that up to 1,000 pigeons were culled.
